

Marin Independent Journal

Thursday, October 31, 2024

GIVING MARIN

A Community Partnership to Strengthen Nonprofits • Visit givingmarin.com

Marin Community Clinics opens latest site

Marin Community Clinics celebrated the opening of its ninth clinic, this one at the Vivalon Healthy Aging Campus with a ribbon-cutting event on Oct. 9 in downtown San Rafael.

The clinic, which anticipates approximately 7,900 patient visits a year, will serve the growing population of low-income seniors with increased access. The clinic will also serve children, San Rafael's homeless population and other patients in need of medical care.

According to Marin Community Clinics, in 2030, one-third of Marin County's population will be 60 years or older, resulting in a growing demand for health services. The new clinic location, opened in partnership with Vivalon and Eden Housing, is the final step in completion of the campus that integrates medical care, 100% affordable housing and social engagement for older residents, all under one roof.

For more information, visit marinclinic.org.

At the Healthy Aging Campus medical clinic debut (from left): San Rafael City Councilmember Rachel Kertz; Dr. José A. Chibrás, medical director, Downtown San Rafael Clinic, Marin Community Clinics; Marin County Supervisor Dennis Rodoni; Kathie Powell, interim CEO, Marin Community Clinics; Mary Sackett, Marin County supervisor; Assemblymember Damon Connolly; Marcy Norenus, chair elect, Marin Community Clinics; Joe O'Hehir, interim CEO, Vivalon; Derek Johnson, Marin County administrator; Dennis Gilardi; Susan Gilardi; San Rafael Mayor Kate Colin; and Shola Olatoye, chief operating officer, Eden Housing.

Photo courtesy of Marin Community Clinics/Brian Dettor